“The first thing I noticed when I stepped out of the plane was the crisp, clean air. It felt like a fresh start, a new chapter in my life. The city below was a vibrant tapestry of colors and sounds, a stark contrast to the quiet solitude of my hometown. I had heard so much about this place, the energy, the opportunities, but now it was all real. I took a deep breath, feeling the sun on my face and the breeze on my skin. This was it. This was my chance to make something of myself, to chase my dreams and live the life I had always wanted. I smiled, knowing that whatever challenges lay ahead, I was ready to face them head-on. The future was bright, and I was determined to make the most of it.”

... the first step is to recognize that the state is a creation of man, and that it is not a natural institution. It is a product of human society, and it is subject to the same laws of change and development as any other human institution. It is not a divine or natural order, and it is not a necessary evil. It is a creature of man, and it is subject to the same laws of man.
